Proposal Title:
Data for Inclusive Societies: Foes and Friends of Inclusiveness in contemporary Greece
D5.1: Report with conference papers/presentations

December 2025

Introduction

The overarching goal of the project Data for Inclusive Societies: Foes and Friends of Inclusiveness in Contemporary Greece (DATIS) has been to study the foes and friends of inclusive societies in contemporary Greece by implementing an innovative empirical research design. DATIS has been a data-driven project aiming to explore, both theoretically and empirically, the enemies and the supporters of inclusive societies, focusing on political parties, political elites, and citizens. In a broader perspective, the project aimed at creating an “index of inclusiveness”. At the core of our analysis have been the causes and consequences of adopting hostile attitudes toward other social groups among both political elites and citizens. Furthermore, the project has shed light on interactions between the micro level (citizens, voters) and the meso level (political elites) in shaping these attitudes. To explore this research direction, we examined driving factors that may facilitate or hinder the rise of such attitudes.

Papers

As part of DATIS dissemination and communication activities, the research team produced and presented conference papers that translate core project work into shareable scientific outputs for the wider scholar community. These contributions disseminate both empirical findings, descriptive patterns and explanatory analyses, and methodological innovations linked to DATIS, including the development and testing of survey items, the use of pilot studies to refine measurement instruments, and the integration of ISSP modules into the project’s broader agenda on political attitudes, social inclusion/exclusion, and contemporary societal change. Collectively, the papers strengthen DATIS visibility in academic networks, support knowledge transfer beyond the consortium, and create reusable research outputs that can inform subsequent publications, comparative analyses, and future survey design.

The papers that have been reviewed and have been accepted in conference proceedings are presented below.
